From what I can tell Voge shares the Pavillion load with a reporter named Jeremy Fugleberg. Most of the recent incomings have been from the latter.

The paper in general has become very negative re: the investigation. Recent editorial. Common themes are our science is fatally flawed and criticism of the long process that is exhausting the community.

Any comment extension is going to be reported by most as "yet another delay in the never-ending Pavillion saga." Most, especially locally, are looking for movement towards closure, not more comments.

what about Voge? Some of the stuff I've read of his seems to be even enough -- think he'll be critical of public comment extension?

Here's a handful. These are the reporters that have been most objective and fair in their coverage, though wouldn't necessarily characterize as "positive." Much of local, regional in Wyoming has been critical.

Can you send over a short list of reporters who have covered EPA's role in Pavillion positively?
